The Shortcomings of The Economic System

By Professor OSCAR L. TRIGGS, Formerly of Chicago University

THE consumer of today is the victim of the warfare of producers. He buys not what as an individual he needs, but WHAT HE CAN GET. He lives in machine made houses, built for an average person who never existed. Everything is sacrificed on the altar of cheapness, and the world runs wild after a bargain. It will sacrifice everything for one. In restoring the soul to objects of manufacture the arts and crafts movement discloses the educational value of work. Work under the present methods is uneducated, without spiritual element or character. It is viewed as a commodity. It is simply a factor in a system that is brutal, slavish and inhuman. This is shown in our factories where small children are employed. Public indignation results in taking the children out of the factories and placing them in school. But it never occurred to any one to change the character of their work SO THAT IT OF ITSELF WOULD BE EDUCATIONAL. In the last century schools have discovered the educational factor of the crafts, and in the next the factories will discover the same educational factor.

THE LABOR UNION ONLY TAKES COGNIZANCE OF THE MATERIAL ASPECTS OF WORK, WAGES AND TIME, AND SO IT CAN HAVE NO PERMANENCE.

The arts and crafts movement is opposed to the trust, for the trust is but a war measure of competition—industry at war. The trust is destined to pass away with the competitive system which caused it. When industries are on a peace footing there will be NO REASON for the existence of the trust.

Manual training in our schools today is but a makeshift, for in so far as it makes it unreal—play work—it loses the educational value of REAL work. The proper basis of an industrial school is an actual factory.

COME, YE DISCONSOLATE

By Thomas Moore

COME, ye disconsolate, where'er you languish,
Come, at God's altar fervently kneel;
Here bring your wounded hearts, here tell your anguish;
Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot heal.

Joy of the desolate, Light of the straying,
Hope when all others die, fadeless and pure;
Here speaks the Comforter, in God's name saying,
"Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot cure."

Here see the Bread of Life; see waters flowing
Forth from the throne of God, pure from above;
Come to the feast of love; come, ever knowing
Earth has no sorrow but Heaven can remove.

BRILLIANT SWORDPLAY.

Italy Is the Home of Fencing as a Refined Art.

Although the Germans were always redoubtable at the rougher games of swordsmanship, it is in Italy that we find the first development of that slender, more regulated, more cunning, better controlled play which we have learned to associate with the term fencing. It is from Italy that fencing as a refined art first spread over Europe, not from Spain, as it has been asserted by many writers.

It is in the Italian rapier play of the late sixteenth century that we find the foundations of fencing in the modern sense of the word. The Italians—if we take their early books as evidence and the fact that their phraseology of fence was adopted by all Europe—were the first to perceive, as soon as the problem of armor breaking ceased to be the most important one in a fight, the superior capabilities for elegant slaughter possessed by the point as compared with the edge. They accordingly reduced the breadth of their sword, modified the hilt portion thereof to admit of readier thrust action and relegated the cut to quite a secondary position in their system. With this lighter weapon they devised in course of time that brilliant, cunning, catlike play known as rapier fence.

The rapier was ultimately adopted everywhere by men of courtly habit, but in England at least it was not accepted without murmur and vituperation from the older fighting class of swordsmen.—Cornhill.

MEASURE HIS FINGER.

If It Is Longer Than Yours, Be Will Rule You When You're Wed.

It is rather late in the day for this bit of advice, but the girl who thinks of marriage should take the precaution of first measuring the forefinger of her lover with her own before she commits herself irrevocably. If his forefinger happens to be longer than her own she would best reject him, for she will never rule her own household, the rule being that whichever has the longer forefinger becomes the ruling power in this home. One engaged girl, upon being told of this test, carefully measured fingers at once, and, upon finding that her fiance's finger was much longer than her own, stoutly declared that she didn't care. "She didn't want to rule the house anyway!" The man breathed freely once more. It was this very same girl, however, who was observed to make special and strenuous efforts to set her own right foot upon the church step before the groom, and to place this same foot upon the carpet before his! It is a sure sign that whenever sets foot first upon the church step and upon the carpet at the altar will rule the house!

This appearance of a negro's head in the room of a man dying after he had committed innumerable barbarities upon black slaves was a strange coincidence and nothing more. Professor Owen, the famous anatomist, had been attending an anatomical lecture where the body of a negro had been dissected. He was taking the head home with him to examine it more carefully. The streets were wet and slippery. Just as he was passing the open door of the house in which the man lay dying he tripped, and the head, slipping from the cloth in which he had it, rolled into the little room. The cry of the dying man diverted the attention of those who were in the room, so that Owen was able to secure his treasure and depart unnoticed.

A MODERN HAMLET.

Wherein Hawthorne Was Akin to the Melancholy Dane.

Certain characteristics of Hawthorne are, of course, indisputable, and it is not fantastic to add that some of these qualities bear a curious resemblance to those of that very Prince of Denmark who seems more real to us than do most living men. Hawthorne was a gentleman; in body the mold of form, and graced with a noble mind. Like Hamlet, he loved to discourse with unlettered people, with wandering artists, with local humorists, although without ever losing his own dignity and inviolate reserve. He had irony for the pretentious, kindness for the simple hearted, merciless wit for the fools. He liked to speculate about men and women, about temptation and sin and punishment, but he remained, like Hamlet,清淡, though he was marked with justice and sanity of mind—of the true Horatio type. Hawthorne was capable, if need be, of passionate and swift action, for all his gentleness and exquisite courtesy of demeanor. Toward the last he had, like Hamlet, his forebodings—"such a kind of gain giving as would perhaps trouble a woman"—and he died, like Hamlet, in silence, conscious of an unfinished task.—Bliss Perry in Atlantic.

London Doctors' Fees.

Discussion by London newspapers of doctors' fees has brought to light some curious information.

"I know a man," one doctor is quoted as saying, "who has a guinea practice in Harley street, a five shilling practice in Kensington and a sixpenny practice in Seven Dials."

In Clapton, a poor quarter of London, fees of twopence (4 cents) are said to be not unknown. One newspaper remarks: "Of the twopence fee it might be said that it brings sickness within the reach of all. In Clapton, at any rate, there is no excuse or justification for any one being well."

This same newspaper says, "Now that flats are so fashionable the doctor's difficulty in guessing the paying ability of his patient is enormously increased, flats being alike the refuge of the wealthy and the indigent."

A Bit of a Blow.

"I suppose you have encountered worse gales than this?" asked an inquisitive passenger of the sailor man during a very moderate bit of a blow.

"This yere ain't a gale," responded the salt. "Why, I was onet in the bay o' Biscay when the wind blew all the paint off the bulwarks. It took four on us to 'old the captain's 'at on 'is 'ead, and even then all the unkars was blown off 'is buttons. That was a blow for yer. Why, even!"

But by this time the curious passenger realized that he was being gayed, and he did not give the imaginative tar the chance of finishing his interesting narrative.
